MEMORANDUM

ARGENTINA-CHILE: BEAGLE CHANNEL DISPUTE

Prospects continue to be poor that Argentina or Chile will make the necessary concessions to defuse the Beagle Channel crisis, or that the Foreign Ministers' meeting tomorrow will either avert or delay an Argentine military initiative.

If the Foreign Ministers' meeting fails, the most probable Argentine military initiative will be to occupy Evout and Barnaveit islands, which are probably uninhabited, and perhaps part of the sparsely inhabited Cape Horn island. This limited action would give the Argentines the land-based territory they seek to guarantee their claim to maritime control of the South Atlantic without a major loss of life. This move would also place the burden of any military escalation on the Chileans. In such a case, the Chileans might limit themselves to a diplomatic response.
